Editor-in-Chief

Linwei Tian, PhD

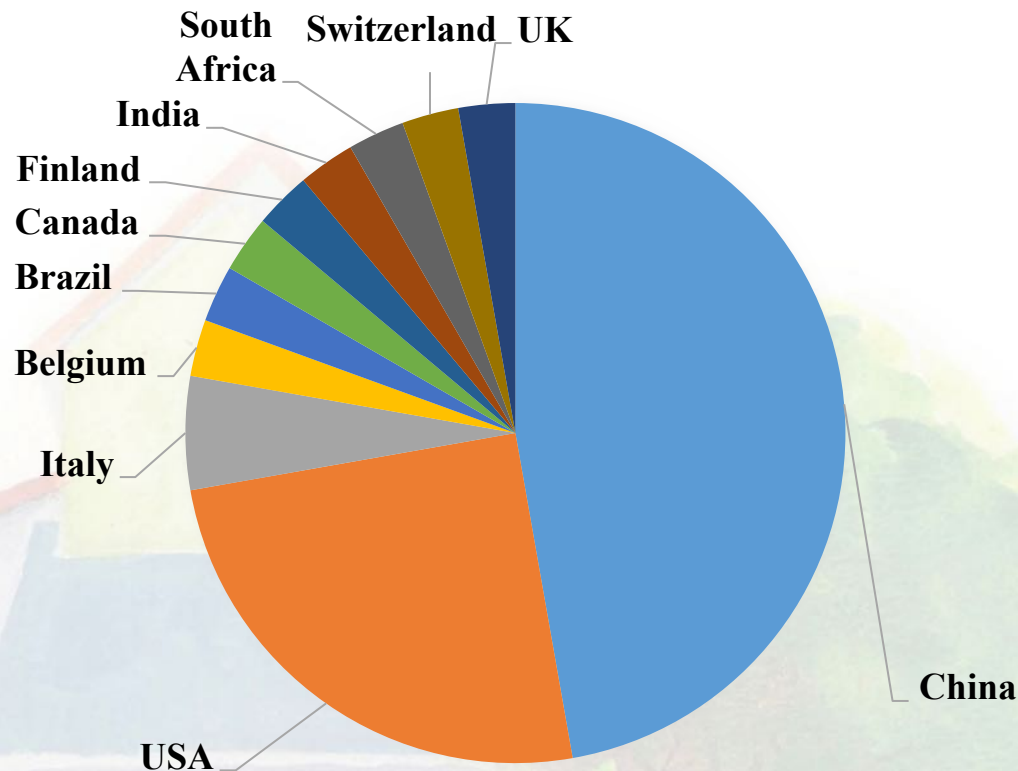

School of Public Health, The University of Hong Kong, China

Dr. Tian is an environmental epidemiologist with a focus on air pollution and health. He is conducting field epidemiology and laboratory work on indoor air pollution and lung cancer in Xuan Wei County, which has the highest lung cancer rates among women in China. Currently he is working to quantify quartz and other carcinogens in coal smoke and to determine whether an exposure-response relationship can be found.

Should such a linkage be found he would advocate a ban of certain types of toxic coals for residential use in China. Further, he would identify reference carcinogenic materials in coal smoke for further laboratory carcinogenesis studies. Dr. Tian has been conducting epidemiological studies in order to inform risk-based air quality control policies.
